

At Puhl Law Group PC we are closely tracking the rapidly evolving public health and community concerns related to the new coronavirus or COVID-19. Rest assured that we are taking all available steps to remain accessible to our clients as we continue to act in accordance with their best interests during this difficult time.

Please see below for answers to some frequently asked questions, and feel free to reach out to us any time at michael@myfamilylawyer.net or 972.569.3166 for assistance with your legal matter.

Our office remains open for both new and existing clients during normal business hours and we frequently respond to messages sent in off hours.

You can contact us either through our website or by phone at 972.569.3166.

Although we are now working remotely from home during most hours we are available to meet with clients in the office, while practicing social distancing protocols, or virtually by prior arrangement through either of the following video chat platforms: Skype or Zoom.com. However, we request that if you are sick or suffer from the characteristics of the COVID19 virus that you remain in your home and away from others, including our staff.

We will continue to provide updates regarding the status of your case by phone and email.

Many clients are concerned as to whether the courts remain open during this pandemic. The answer to that question is an evolving one. The courthouse is not open at this time but judges continue to hear emergency matters by video conferencing methods. They are also considering other types of cases as we all evolve through this crisis. In the event that you already have a court date we will keep you advised as to whether the matter will be considered by the court on that date or rescheduled for another date

Parties are encouraged to utilize mediation, arbitration or settlement negotiations to resolve their matters until the court dockets return to normal. We also provide those services for clients and for other parties in need of resolution of their pending cases.
